These transformers are not a game.

Ground-mounted utility boxes are situated near the tiny houses in our community. They are not suitable for activities like sitting, studying, or play. These pad-mount transformers are integral to the buried power line system, delivering electricity to our homes and other buildings in the community. Unlike transformers on utility poles, they lack distance-based security and contain around 7,200 volts of electricity. Safety can be compromised if they are hit or tampered with.

Please follow these Safety Tips:

Always use caution and keep a safe distance away from transformers.

Do not let children play on or near transformers.

Do not stick anything through cracks into the transformer box.

Do not dig without calling 1-800-DIG-SAFE or 811. Underground power lines can extend in any direction from a transformer.

Do not paint or decorate transformers. The metal is assigned a specific color (usually green) so we can easily identify them. Painting could impair the equipment or cover up warning signs.
